Email Templates for Personal Injury Firms:

Effective Client Engagement

With personal injury cases, timely responses are key to earning trust and retaining clients, and having prepared templates on hand can help accelerate your communications. But it's not enough to be quick. It's important that clients know that you understand their problems, that your communications are informative, and that you are able to demonstrate approachability and care.

Your initial engagements typically encompass more than that first touch. You'll want to ensure you're equipped to give all the necessary information your clients need and that you're able to help them navigate the process of working with your firm.

Tip:

To make the best use of the templates in this guide, make sure to review them and tailor them based on the services your firm provides. Based on the situation, you may also want to combine messaging from multiple templates into a separate communication.

Remember that these templates are provided for educational purposes only. Lawyers should always use professional judgment when using or revising these templates, which may require amendments based on your jurisdiction and the needs of your particular file.

EMAIL #1

Introductions with a request to book a consultation

When clients first reach out, you'll want to follow up with a personal note and an invitation to book a consultation. With this communication, you will want to demonstrate that you're able to look more closely at their situation, that you are prepared to deal with a range of scenarios related to their problem, and that you understand their cares and concerns.

Use this template to establish a personal connection with the client, showcase your law firm's expertise, and invite conversation to discuss the specifics of the client's situation. You can also use this email as a follow-up for clients that have submitted any initial pre-screening information.

Initial follow-up with prescreening

If your law firm deals with a high volume of inquiries, you may need to have a system in place for prescreening potential clients and identifying referrals from past clients. This saves you the time of following up with every potential client, many of whom may not be a fit for your services.

An initial prescreening email should be sent promptly when a client first reaches out, as this will help encourage them to follow up while the problem is top of mind. By providing a list of case types in your response, you can also help potential clients self-assess whether your firm is the right fit for them. The following template can be used to solicit brief details of their situation via an email response, or if you have an online intake form for prescreening your inquiries, this can be used instead.

Legal fees and costs estimate

For many clients, having a general sense of what it will cost to pursue their legal matter will factor into their decision on whether to move forward with it and which law firm they choose to hire. Being upfront with your rates and how contingency fees work for their case shows transparency and reinforces a sense of trust with potential clients.

As the question of cost may come up in conjunction with other questions throughout the intake process, the contents of this email can be included within your other follow-up communications as well.

Subject: Estimated legal fees and costs for your personal injury case

Dear [CLIENT NAME],

We understand that managing legal fees and costs is an important consideration. Our fees for handling your personal injury case would be a [PERCENTAGE] contingency fee, not including additional costs that may be required.

We are committed to transparency throughout the process, and we want you to feel confident in our approach. If you have any questions about how these fees would be applied, or about anything else regarding your case, please don't hesitate to ask.

Thank you for your trust in [LAW FIRM NAME].
